"1 x 10<sup>17</sup>" and Fulfilled Prophecy

Divide the number "1" by "1 x 10<sup>17</sup>" (which is 1 followed by 17 zeros).

This is the probability that one person could randomly fulfill just eight of the prophecies found in the Bible, which identify for us who the Son of God is. This is one chance out of 100,000,000,000,000,000 (one hundred quadrillion).

We don't have the ability to comprehend this number - it is just too large. The best we can do to try (at least a little bit), by way of some examples:

- Suppose we cover the entire state of Texas with silver dollars, to the depth of 2 feet. Take one of the silver dollars and mark an "X" on it. Thoroughly mix the coins (including the one with the "X"). Spend several years randomly walking around the state, blindfolded, and then randomly pick up one of the coins. What is the chance that the coin you randomly picked would be the one with the "X"? About the same as a person randomly fulfilling these eight prophecies.

Basically, there is no chance that someone could randomly fulfill these eight (or twelve or fifteen) prophecies. For it to happen, it would have to occur by design (a deliberate act of God). Chance just won't work!
